

Yismelle Duran, Ph.D., is a secondary World Languages Teacher with six years of experience in teaching foreign languages - French and Spanish. She has also taught college courses in the Department of Business and Law at Pontificia Universidad Católica Madre y Maestra (PUCMM) and Universidad Tecnológica de Santiago (UTESA), in the Dominican Republic. She is a Fulbright alumna who holds a master's degree in international Affairs from Florida State University and an advanced master's degree in Globalization and Development from the University of Antwerp in Belgium. Dr. Duran is also an Adjunct Professor in the Department of Literacy and Learning at Texas Woman's University, the same university from which she obtained her doctoral degree in Literacy, Languages, and Culture. Her research interests include second language acquisition, heritage language speakers, bilingual education, and biliteracy development.

Facilitating learning and sharing her knowledge is something that makes her happy. She is very practical and wants to teach students skills they will use in this ever-changing world.
